Michael Horovitz...live poetry reading and introduces new film by Colin Still.

In 2004 I launched the William Blake Klezmatrix band, featuring Peter Lerner on piano, Madeline Solomon's flute, Annie Whitehead's trombone & vocals, and my readings, songs, jazzpoems & anglo-saxophone. We play original compositions, spontaneous improvisations, multiple variations of the biblical, folk, blues, jazz, rock and klezmer grooves, & our settings of William Blake's songs & prophecies – for example, performing The Tyger as a calypso. Last April we toured Belgium, and Colin Still, whose Optic Nerve outfit has produced films (available on dvd) of Allen Ginsberg, Robert Creeley, Michael McClure et al), followed us around, resulting in some revealing footage of WBK rehearsals and performances. I will be introducing and commenting on clips, performing a couple of numbers, and taking Q&A tonight. – Michael Horovitz

In The Nursery - Live performance of Cabinet of Dr. Caligari. 90 mins. 12 Cert.
THE CABINET OF DR CALIGARI
 Dir: Robert Wiene / Germany 1919

IN THE NURSERY present a distinct and modern accompaniment, a mixture of hypnotic and subliminal sound textures, inspired by the film's startling expressionistic imagery, distorted symbolism and bizarrely-angled design.

"ITN's intuitive grasp of sound and powerful sense of drama has imbued 'The Cabinet of Dr Caligari' with a dark, mesmeric ambience. It is a vital, complementary and modernistic score."

[Ashley Franklin / BBC Radio]

IN THE NURSERY is the Sheffield-based musical project centered around the nucleus of twin brothers Klive and Nigel Humberstone. ITN's musical history spans 30 years and has constantly expressed their desire for progress and experimentation. Their sublime, cinematic music blends electronica, classical arrangements, orchestral percussion and soundscapes evoking a timelessness quality.

IN THE NURSERY have released more than two dozen albums since 1981. The creative progress of the band's albums has always consolidated their distinctive sound while taking on board contemporary influences.

ITN's music has been used on numerous film soundtracks and trailers including Game of Thrones, Gran Torino, Beowulf, The Aviator, Interview with the Vampire, Along Came a Spider and The Rainmaker as well as the La Femme Nikita TV series.

Parallel to their studio works, ITN have spent the last twelve years developing their Optical Music Series, new scores for classic silent films. The series to date has included The Cabinet of Dr Caligari, Asphalt, Man with a Movie Camera, Hindle Wakes, A Page of Madness, Electric Edwardians and their latest The Passion of Joan of Arc. ITN have performed their new scores at film festivals around the world.

IN THE NURSERY's last studio album 'Blind Sound' was released April 2011.

Mon 5 Sept FILM MAKERS CONVENTION DELEGATE INTRODUCTION WESTBOURNE STUDIOS

London Film Makers Convention

A opportunity for movers and shakers of London's vibrant cinema scene to meet and network with likeminded film makers.

Businesses and sole-traders may register as delegates for the London Film Makers Convention 2011. Sign-up at the Delegate desk for details.

Expect unadvertised famous names and exclusive film screenings at next weeks dedicated London Film Makers programme at Westbourne Studios.

Also: start a film chat in the Talkaake or bring your own film to the Video Cafe.

Talkaake - The People Speak is a London-based creative network that designs formats, technologies and methods to engage people in conversation, innovation, play and decision-making in an open-ended and fun way. Fusing participatory performance, familiar tele-/visual media formats and network technologies our work augments spaces into 'public squares' to bring communities together in which they can work collaboratively in safe and open environment.

The Talkaake has been designed to be a fun and spontaneous chat show. With everyone sat around the flying saucer of chat, it's the ideal format for engaging people in an interactive participant-led discussion and idea-generation. Allowing people to decide what's relevant to them makes for spontaneous and inclusive entertainment, evaluation, facilitation and learning. An important aspect of the Talkaake Method is that topics of discussion are audience led. The host facilitates rather than controls, and helps to create an environment where participants feel comfortable and confident enough to join in the discussion.

Video Cafe PROTOCOLS

Panel discussion about future of film industry with Jes Benstock, Olivier Kaempfer & Courttia Newland

Jes started acting while still at school in Glasgow, Scotland. He set up a successful comic theatre company, The Merry Mac Fun Co, in the 1980s. While touring, winning numerous awards and making TV appearances, Jes developed a passion for photography and film.

He moved full time into film and video, experimenting in interactive art and making music promos. His short film starring Tilda Swinton, "The Box" (for the band Orbital) won awards around the world and has over 1.5 million hits on Youtube.

His latest work "The British Guide To Showing Off" builds on his same unique blend of styles, his light touch and humour.

Olivier Kaempfer

Olivier founded his production company Parkville Pictures in 2007. Amongst those was the nomination for the BAFTA award Olivier received as a producer for the short film "Ralph" in 2009.

"The First Days of Spring" was theatrically released in July 2009 and was distributed internationally through Verve Pictures and Mercury Music Group.

In February 2010, Olivier's first feature project "Borrowed Time", developed with writer and director Jules Bishop, was selected by the Film London and BBC Films award-winning Microwave scheme for funding.

Courtia Newland

Courtia Newland's first novel, The Scholar, was published in 1997. Further critically acclaimed work includes Society Within (1999) and Snakeskin (2002). He is co-editor of IC3: The Penguin

Book of New Black Writing in Britain (2000) and has short stories featured in many anthologies. His recent books include a novella, The Dying Wish (2006), and a collection of macabre short stories, Music for the Off-Key (2006). He was shortlisted for the CWA Dagger in the Library Award 2007, the Alfred Fagon Award 2010, and longlisted for the Frank O' Conner Award 2011. His latest anthology, which he co-edited with Monique Raffey, is Tell Tales 4: The Global Village (2009) A Book of Blues, a new collection of short stories, was published in March 2011.

Excavating Nicolas Roeg - An evening with Michael Woods including rare screening of Sound

Michael Woods is a photographer and artist, who lives and works in North Kensington, London. His photographs and Surrealist assemblages have been widely published and exhibited, and in 1991, he co-authored Paris and the Surrealists (Thames & Hudson), with George Melly. His television work includes Countdown to War, starring Ian McKellen (Granada), The Infinite Worlds of H G Wells, directed by Robert Young (Hallmark), and a variety of contributions to productions such as The Clothes Show (BBC 1), Home Front (BBC 2), George Melly's Last Stand (BBC 2-4), and Brother's and Sister's in Love (ITV 1-3). He made special images for James Grey's Little Odessa, starring Tim Roth (Immigrant Pictures NY), and following this, his friend, the film director, Nicolas Roeg, invited Woods to work on Two Deaths, starring Michael Gambon and Sonia Braga, for which he constructed montage photographs utilized in the title and credit sequence of the film. In 1999, again with Nicolas Roeg, he was enlisted to work on Sound, a celebration of Sound on Film, featuring Claudia Schiffer, and for which he provided stills and special photography, on-screen montages, special effects, and second camera VFX, as well as designing the final credit sequence (BBC/Sunreset). Sound was screened at the Venice Film Festival in 2000, where Woods exhibited his work from the film at St Andrea. Puffball, Dan Weldon's adaptation of Fay Weldon's seminal book, directed by Nicolas Roeg, is the last film Woods worked on. Low budget but with a star studded cast: Kelly Reilly, Rita Tushingham, Miranda Richardson, and Donald Sutherland, Woods found himself providing stills and special photography, devising and constructing special effects, VFX and EPK filming, and was even roped in to play a hospital porter pushing a dying Rita Tushingham in her wheelchair.

At the present time, Michael Woods is working on a commission for the Royal Brompton Hospital, Arena of Hears, to be installed in December, and two books, The Terminal Surrealist - Last Photographs of George Melly 2006-7, and Portobello Memoir.

Pure Evil at Westbourne Studios

To understand a bit about Pure Evil it is illuminating to know that he is a descendant of Sir Thomas More, the Lord Chancellor who wrote the controversial work Utopia and who was later beheaded by King Henry VIII. With this busy background (Sir Thomas was later canonised) it is only natural that Pure Evil should explore the darker side of the wreckage of Utopian dreams and the myth of the Apocalypse, a belief in the life-changing event that brings history with all its conflicts to an end.

Pure Evil's ancestry is alleged to include eight saints: Vladimir the Great, Saint Anna of Russia, the Holy Martyrs Boris and Gleb, Saint Stephen of Hungary, Saint Margaret of Scotland and Saint Mathilde together with Saint Thomas More, Humbert III of Savoy and several European royal families. He was also a descendant of the Old English Chieftain Ailric, Kings Thane to Edward the Confessor, who held Cawthorne and much of South Yorkshire before the Conquest.

Lucy Sparrow at Westbourne Studios

'2011 has seen the explosion of Lucy Sparrow and her felt sculpture. With its often surreal and child-like appearance, it can melt the hearts of even the hardest cynics. Well-known recently for her London Telephone Box which has been created entirely out of fabric, right down to the embroidered 'tart cards' on the interior and the 'TOX 07' tag carefully stitched onto the outside. Lucy has shown her work throughout Notting Hill, East London and Brighton to name a few.'

Zeus at the Portobello Pop Up

For the past 24 years, London artist Zeus has been drawing inspiration from urban culture to create dynamic, experimental compositions that have re-defined graffiti art.

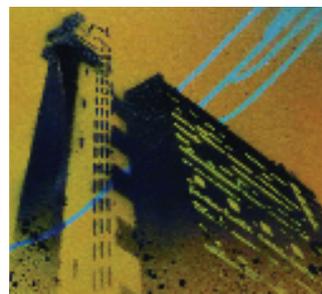

Captivated by the hip-hop scene of the 80s, he began expressing his creative talents on the street when he was just 14, using walls, trains, and open spaces as his galleries.

Since then Zeus has continually pushed the boundaries of graffiti artistry, taking the form out of its traditional setting and into new, exciting and more legitimate places.

His latest works represents an innovative fusion of graffiti techniques and typography, fine art and sculpture and reflect both his background on the streets and his formal training at Chelsea College of Art.

The People's Free State of Portobello manifesto by Tom Vague

The campaign to save the antiques market and small shops from the super-landlords' done store takeover plans is the latest battle in the historic community struggle of the People's Free State of Portobello.

Hippodrome racecourse protest

The first great local community action campaign was a footpath protest in 1837 at the Hippodrome racecourse. On the morning of the first race meeting, locals cut through the fence around the course where it blocked the path to Notting Barns farm. After the owner blocked the hole up again, the first community activists maintained the 'ancient public way' by reinstating the entrance hole and adding a northern exit. Then they gathered on the hill grandstand to give 3 cheers for the parish of Kensington.

The Chartist Feargus O'Connor

The first radical local hero was the Chartist leader Feargus O'Connor, who trailblazed the People's Charter calling for universal suffrage in the 1830s. After bringing the country to the brink of revolution in 1848, Feargus lived out his days at Notting Hill Gate. For his final funeral march to Kensal Green cemetery, it was reported that 'friends and supporters of the deceased in his early political movements mustered in strong force at the Prince Albert.'

The Napoleon of Notting Hill

In GK Chesterton's 'The Napoleon of Notting Hill' novel from 1904, the randomly selected joker king decrees that the London boroughs become free city states, ruled by provosts who have to wear medieval style robes. In the local patriotism tradition of the racecourse path protest, the provost of Notting Hill takes the king seriously and fights to save 'Pump Street' from demolition to make way for a 'corridor of trade'. After a battle at the beginning of Portobello Road, Notting Hill wins the war but is changed for the worse.

The first squatters and activists

Local housing action from below began after the Second World War when homeless Eastenders marched up Campden Hill to squat blocks of luxury flats. After the Notting Hill race riots of 1958 and the Rachman slum housing revelations of the Profumo affair, in the 60s local housing revolution the area was overrun by community activists.

Darcus Howe recalled: "I think Notting Hill has always been, even before the Carnival started, explained to me as liberated territory, a place where you stood up for your rights." Black community groups formed in the wake of the riots and the killing of Kelso Cochrane included Amy Ashwood Garvey's Advancement of Coloured Peoples Association. The post-riot initiatives of the Methodist church on Lancaster Road led to the founding of the Notting Hill Social Council.

The first tenants' housing associations formed in the late 50s in the Rachman slum areas Colville and St Stephen's Gardens. The main aim of the former was to open up the fenced-off garden squares of the Powis and Colville neighbourhood. The more militant St Stephen's Gardens group held a rent strike to force the post-Rachman landlords to do some repairs.

The London Free School and the Notting Hill People's Association

In 1966 the London Free School community action group launched the Notting Hill Carnival and the underground hippy scene from All Saints church hall on Powis Gardens. The following year the Notting Hill People's Association formed 'to force the need for non-profit ownership of 1-9 Colville Gardens into the consciousness of the Conservative Council.' In the summer of love the People's Association organised the Notting Hill Community Workshop Project housing survey, a more serious version of the London Free School, in All Saints hall – which became the People's Centre.

In May '68 a group of anti-Vietnam war protesters turned up at a People's Association meeting in All Saints hall intent on more direct community action. The Hustler underground paper reported one man saying: "It's time we started a revolution in North Kensington."

The Notting Hill Interzone A map issue of International Times was ordained with 'God gave the land to the people.' Courtney Tulloch wrote in his local history notes: 'Dig the vibrations in and around Notting Hill, perhaps the only area in London where through the differing enclaves of experimental living, a free-form and ingenious communal life-style could really burst forth... Now there are signs that a real underground community is alive, and especially in the village around Portobello Road.'

The local hippy scene has been described as a euphoric classless society with free food, housing and love. If you needed money you just set up a market stall on Portobello, Hare Krishna followers and Situationists were taken seriously, and benevolent rich hippies financed the happenings and parties. The various experimental communal life-styles that sprung up in the area included the Quintessence Hare Krishna commune and the Colvillia gay scene.

In the 1969 film 'Leo the Last', Marcel Mastroianni plays an alienated aristocrat who brings about a 'firework revolution' in which his façade house (on the site of the Lancaster West estate) is stormed and destroyed. The Electric Cinema Club was then a 'safe haven for the hippies' to watch cult movies and mixed-media shows in, with all profits going 'to alternative society scenes.'

In the early 70s there seems to have been a demo in Notting Hill virtually every other day while All Saints hall hosted at least one community action meeting a night. By then the People's Association consisted of various sub-groups covering the main local issues: housing, play, education, unemployment and police.

The Notting Hill Squatters group occupied luxury flats to draw attention to homelessness in the area. The West London Claimants Union's campaigned for Social Security for local strikers declaring: 'Our movement must challenge the whole nature and purpose of work in this society.' The still surviving North Kensington Neighbourhood Law Centre, the first in the UK, opened at 74 Golborne Road in 1970, succeeding the People's Association legal advice centre on Lancaster Road.

The Westway opening and Mangrove demos

The opening of the Westway in 1970 was accompanied by another famous local road protest over the rehousing of the remaining tenants alongside the flyover. As the Westway opened to traffic there was another rehousing demo on the hard shoulder and the same day there was a march under the flyover protesting about police persecution of the Mangrove Caribbean restaurant on All Saints Road.

Angry Brigade and Schoolkids Oz

GK Chesterton's literary fantasy of interecine area war became reality with the Angry Brigade, representing North Kensington, bombing targets in the south of the borough. In 'The Angry Brigade' book by Gordon Carr, Powis Square is cited as 'the centre for radical student drop outs and for anyone who wants to go to the extremes in social and political life without too much attention from his neighbours or the authorities.'

In the 'Schoolkids' Oz trial, the defence lawyer John Mortimer (Emily's dad) compared religious dissenters with hippies: "Now the dissenters wear long hair and colourful clothes and dream their dreams of another world in small bed-sitting rooms in Notting Hill Gate. In place of sermons with their lurid phrases about damnation, we have magazines reflecting a totally different society from that in which we live."

Frenz of Portobello

The original Friends of Portobello, Friends/Frenz became the local underground paper at 305 Portobello Road, as Jonathon Green put it, covering 'the Mangrove, the Metro, lots of police harassment, black struggle, hippy angst; the proper Notting Hill scene.'

The spirit of GK Chesterton was summoned up in the Frenz story about property speculating in Powis Square: 'The battle in Notting Hill Gate is not just a battle in a small and highly populated area of London, it is representative in a definitive sense of the battle of a whole new society.' The struggle was defined as 'blacks, freaks, heads, youths, communes, single people' versus 'dolly girls, accountants, computer programmers and cocca-drinking androids of the consumer society.'

The White Panthers

The local White Panthers group were a much less serious version of the Angry Brigade, set up in solidarity with the Black Panthers, with Mick Farren and the Pink Fairies as London's answer to Detroit's John Sinclair and the MCS. "The party line was very, very vague," recalls the White Panthers Minister of Information Steve Mann in 'Days in the Life'. "We had to overthrow western civilisation as soon as possible – before lunchtime preferably, although that wasn't too easy because we didn't get up very early."

Pinkwind free gigs and the People's Free Carnival

On the gatefold sleeve of Hawkwind's 1971 album 'X In Search of Space', Dave Brock and co are pictured playing a free gig under the Westway along Acklam Road. The Pink Fairies' 'Right On, Fight On' track was apparently inspired by a Fairies/Hawkwind 'Pinkwind' gig under the flyover that was broken up by police.

Following the Westway opening protests, another local community struggle with the Council for control of the Motorway Development Trust led to the founding of the North Kensington Amenity Trust – to manage the 23 acres under the flyover for the benefit and use of the local community. Under the administration of the first trust director Anthony Perry, this included the first Caribbean Carnival HQ on Acklam Road.

All Saints Hall Community Lock-in

The last great local protest of the early 70s was the Notting Hill People's Association 'community lock-in' at All Saints church hall on the night of May 8/9 1973. During the extended meeting, reported in the press as 'The Siege of Notting Hill', councillors were held hostage and forced to listen to locals' demands which included opening the Tabernacle as a community centre; and saving the Electric from redevelopment.

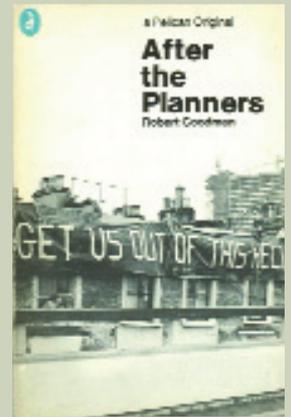

In 1973 the last surviving underground community groups – Frenz, the People's Defence anti-police group, the Claimants Union and the People's Association housing group – made a last stand, declaring: 'In isolation we can too easily lose our strategy and initiative and that's what 'they' want – together we can turn Notting Hill into a liberated zone.'

The Portobello Village, the Albion Free State Meat Roxy and the Ruff Tuff Cream Puff squatting estate agents magazine

'The Portobello Village' between Lancaster Road and Oxford Gardens was described by Craig Sams as the 'alternative quarter' of the market, consisting of 'reggae music, soul food, underground newspapers, wholewheat bread, Bedouin dresses, art deco objects, natural shoes, herbal medicines, a free shop, brown rice and a gypsy fortune teller.' On Lancaster Road the squatted Royalty cinema/bingo hall was dubbed the Albion Free State Meat Roxy by Heathcote Williams, who published the Ruff Tuff Cream Puff squatting estate agents magazine.

Chippenham and Elgin squatters

As a large part of the Maida Hill area was designated for demolition and redevelopment, the Chippenham and Elgin squatting scene emerged, out of which came Joe Strummer's pre-Clash group the 101'ers. Acklam Hall under the Westway, which succeeded All Saints hall as the community centre in 1975, was inaugurated by a 101'ers benefit gig for the Law Centre on Golborne Road.

The Rough Trade state of independents

The Rough Trade DIY record label state of independents was founded in 1976 when Geoff Travis set up shop at 202 Kensington Park Road. In the late 70s the backyard extension of the shop became the world distribution centre of punk and reggae indie labels and DIY fanzines. The Portobello underground press tradition was continued at 286 where the post-punk fanzine boom was orchestrated by Better Badges.

The Free and Independent Republic of Frestonia

In 1977 squatters on Freston Road faced with eviction declared their independence from Britain and appealed to the UN for assistance. In the tradition of 'The Napoleon of Notting Hill' and 'Passport to Pimlico', the Free and Independent Republic of Frestonia featured border controls, passports, embassies and a national anthem that went: 'Long live Frestonia, Land of the Free – not the GLC.'

Out of Frestonia came the Mutoid Waste Company and the Bramley Road housing co-op. Some Bohemian atmosphere is maintained in the area today by the short-life housing co-ops formed by 70s squatting activists, such as Backdoor, Ladbroke Grove Portobello, P59 and W11.

On the 30th anniversary of Frestonia, residents of Pepler House on the Wornington Green estate made a declaration of independence in opposition to Kensington Housing Trust's regeneration/demolition plans for the block. Under the Westway the tradition of the hippy free gigs has continued at the Inn on the Green, Portobello Green festivals, Mick Jones's Rock'n'Roll Library and the Pop-up Cinema.
